

The Auron Method: A Mystery at the Velada

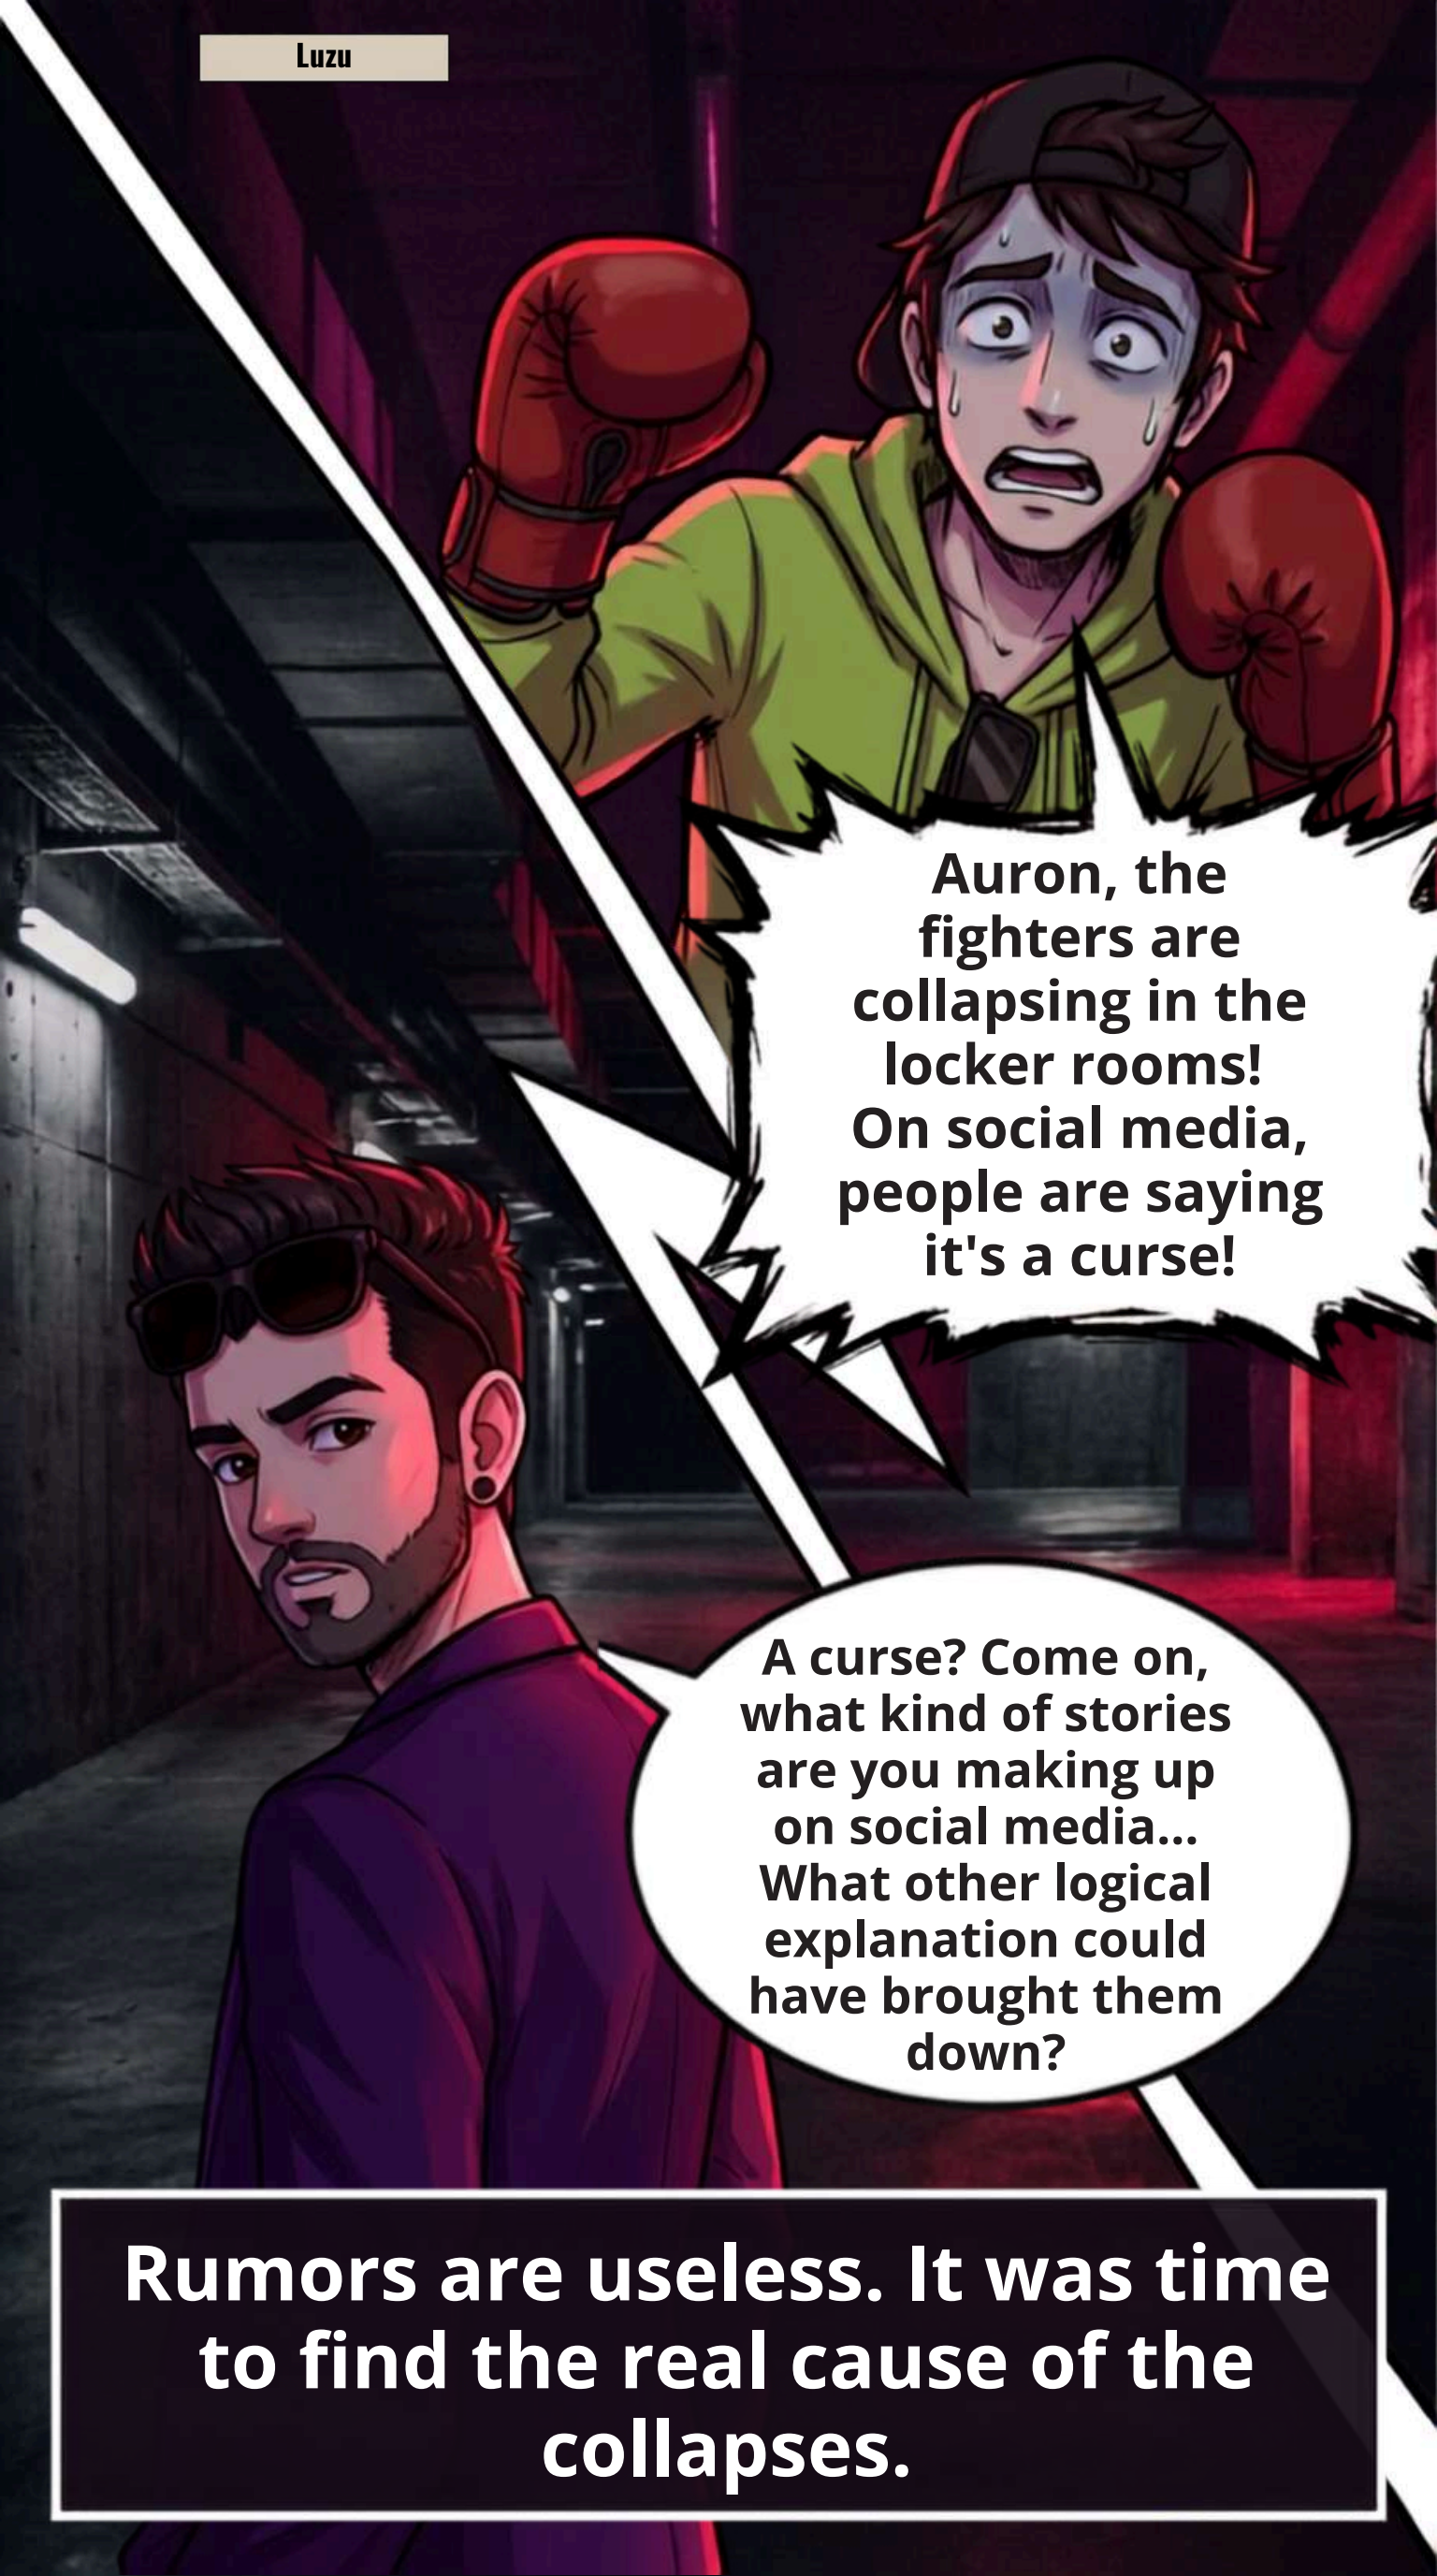

Auronplay wasn't just a successful streamer...

...He was also a very curious person with a thirst for knowledge.

And besides, with a slight sense of justice.

In the next few minutes of this massive event, he would learn that life doesn't always go as planned.

Auron, the fighters are collapsing in the locker rooms! On social media, people are saying it's a curse!

A curse? Come on, what kind of stories are you making up on social media... What other logical explanation could have brought them down?

Rumors are useless. It was time to find the real cause of the collapses.

Ari

Well, there's no logical explanation, Auron! Three of them have already come down with nausea and headaches—they can barely stand... Nobody's touched them, so it must be a curse!

Plex

Viruzz

Panic is spreading, Auron! There are already fights breaking out in the hallways because people are desperately looking for someone to blame for this.

It's your fault!
You put a curse
on me because you didn't want me to beat you!

Come on, girls, the stadium is waiting for us! Calm down!

You know that's impossible! I'm exactly the same!
Maybe it was you,
and you're just pretending

I need more information. Mr. Jagger, look for videos of the moment when they start feeling sick.

They just posted a video! A boxer was perfectly fine while they were putting makeup on him...

And suddenly, as he stood up to warm up before stepping into the ring... he fell flat on his face, knocked out cold!

Mr Jagger

Hypothesis A

But Curses
Don't Exist

Hypothesis B

But it affects everyone, and security is extremely tight.

Medical Facts

The event's security makes poisoning highly unlikely, but the definitive proof that sabotage can be ruled out is that wrestlers from both teams are knocked out.

Stomachache, headache, and nausea, huh...
These are real and serious medical symptoms. Has anyone called a doctor yet?

Yeah, sure. Look at that nervous-looking guy over there in the middle—he's the emergency room doctor.

Being so close to the fighters... don't you realize what's going on? Are you stupid or something?

Let's isolate the key variable: the makeup. If that powder was the cause of the dizziness, I need to examine its original packaging.

Let's try mixing it with water. As I suspected, it's not a curse. It's a logistical error.

It's simple. The production team mistook the translucent cosmetic powder for the industrial anti-slip powder used in the ring.

These powders contain volatile chemicals. When mixed with heavy sweat, they react and release toxic fumes.

SWEAT

BORIC ACID

TOXIC VAPORS

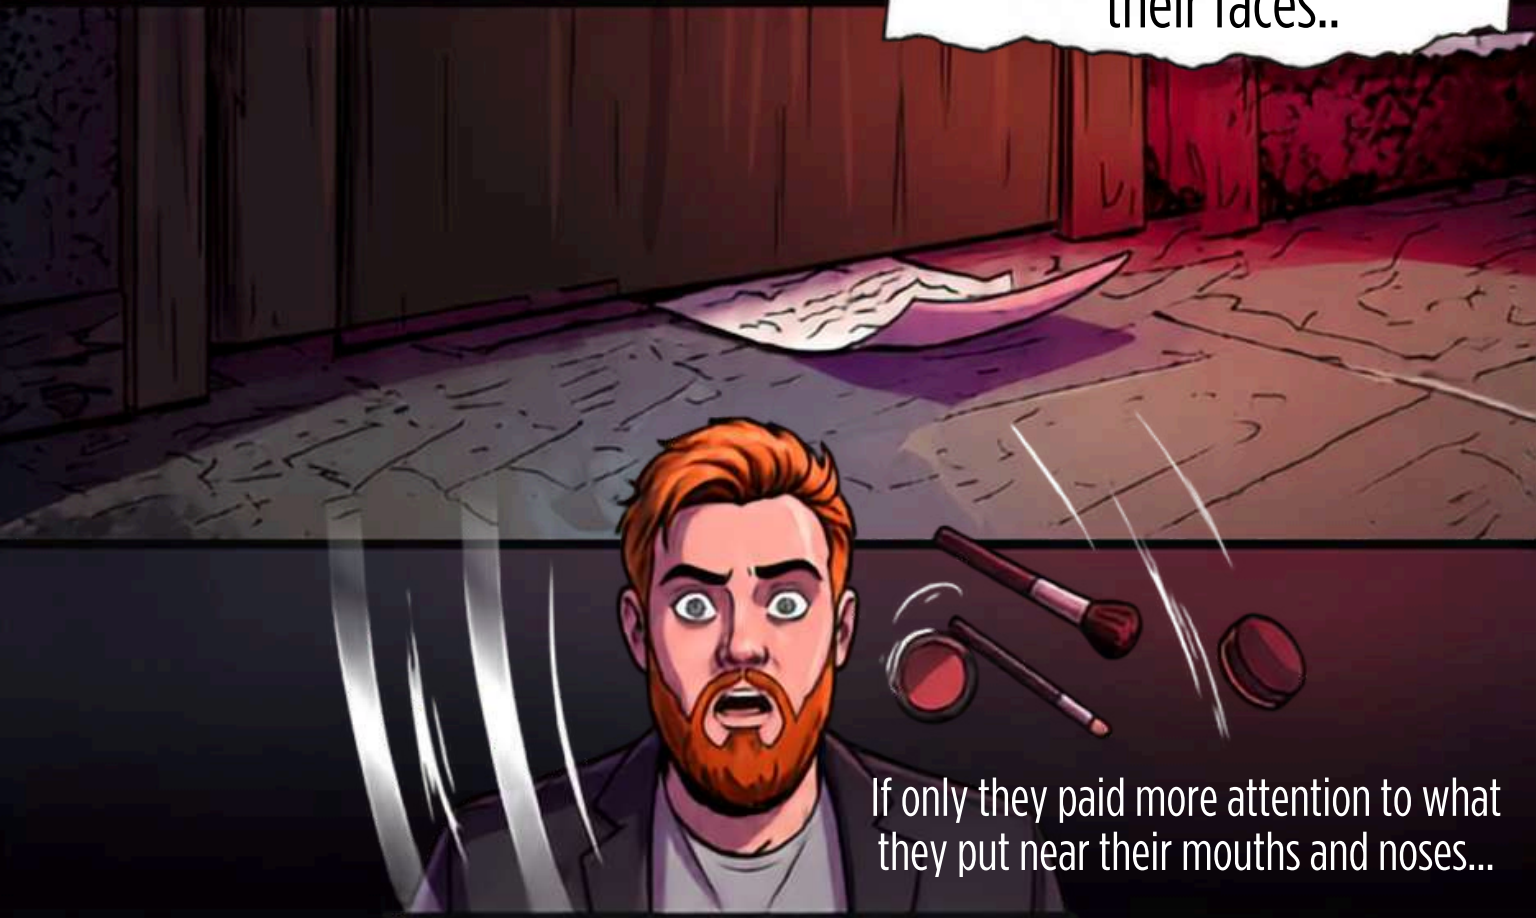

When they come into contact with the face, they are inhaled directly, poisoning the body.

INHALATION

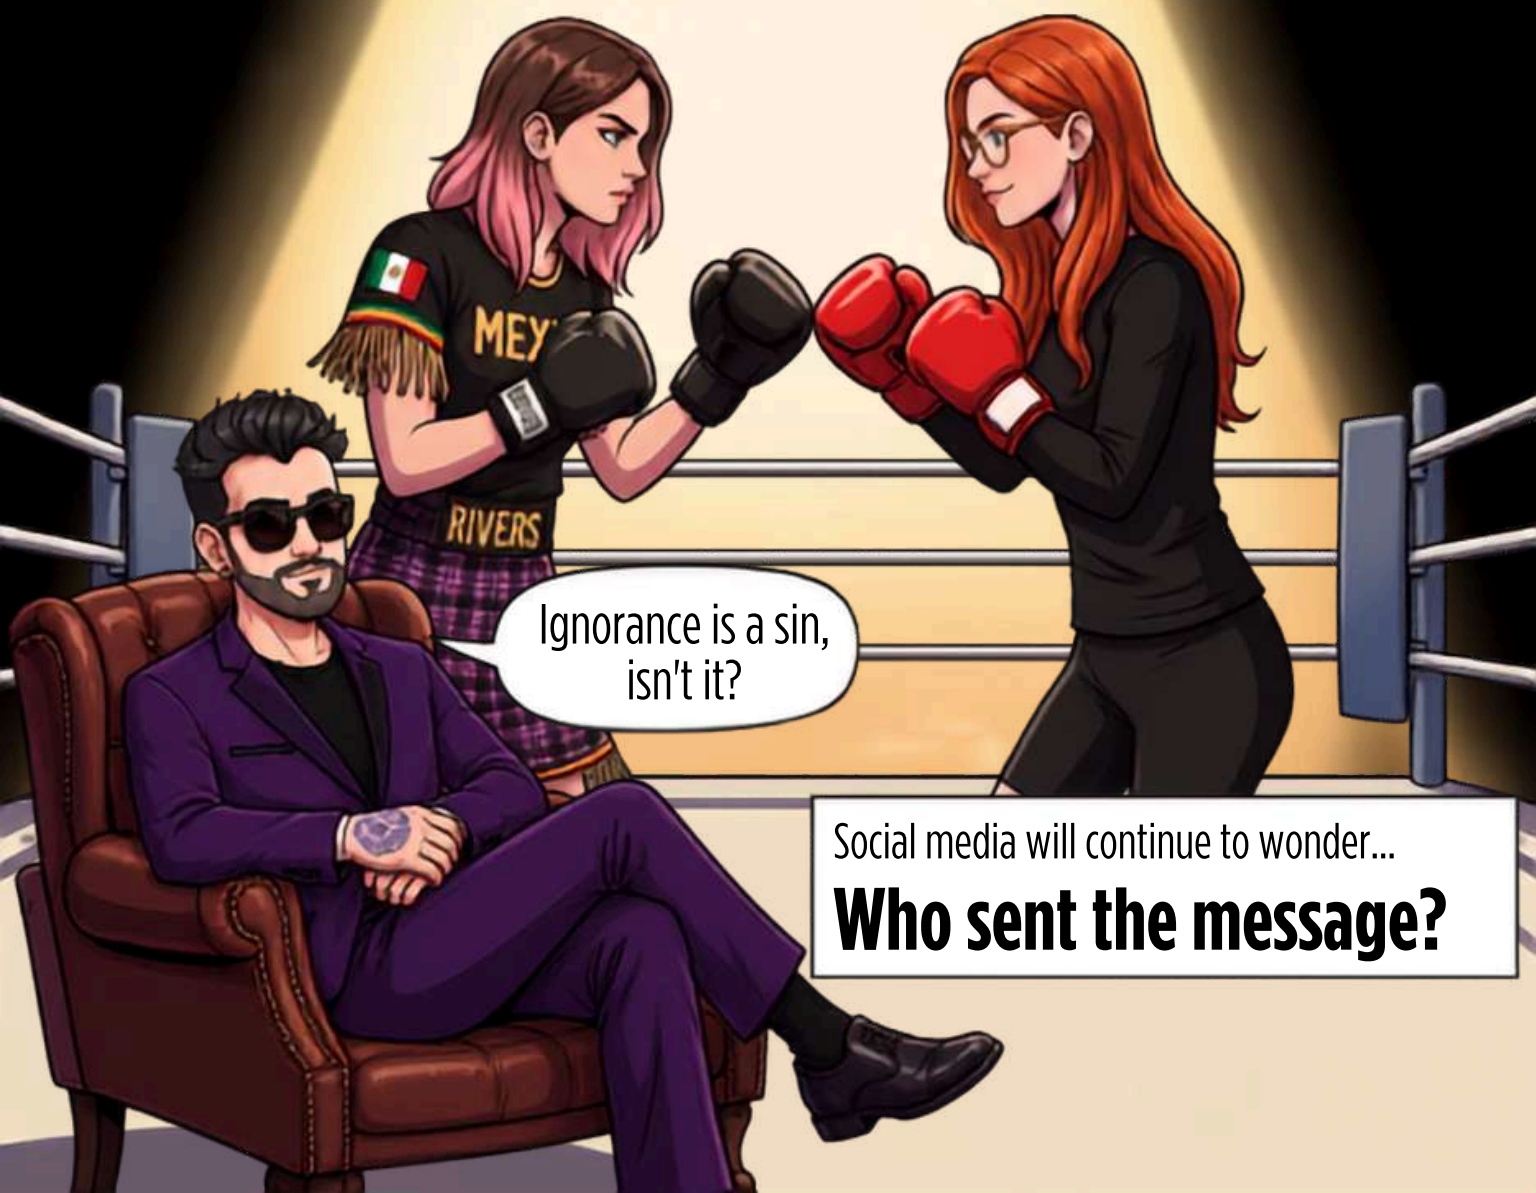

The face powder used at the event contains a toxic and carcinogenic substance. All they have to do is wash their faces..

If only they paid more attention to what they put near their mouths and noses...

AND HERE'S THE MAIN EVENT!
NO PROBLEMS AT ALL-JUST PURE ENERGY!

Ignorance is a sin,
isn't it?

Social media will continue to wonder...
